Respected Sir,

I am writing this letter with great diffidence. I have taken this opportunity to try to express my deep sense of grateful and respectful recapitulation of the uniformly kind consideration I have received at your hands all the years I had the privilege of working under you in the Central College, Bangalore. I am always weighed by the sense of unworthiness on my own part, that I did not make use of that contact as I should have, a contact that is not given to all and that very few people can get. Occassionally, I get the feeling that I could have done something, that I was not utterly incapable of higher work^{or} in the field of research, but to my lasting regret I remember that I missed the God-given opportunity and am therefore lapsing into the routine of dull mediocrity. Be it as it may, I have always the highest admiration and respect for your academic eminence, and the magnificent sense of human values. I will continue to have the same feelings for a long long time to com though it may be that I will not have so many opportunities of coming and paying my respects to you in person.

I will deem it a great favour if you have an occassional kind thought to spare towards me , who now worships you from a distance of space but who has the same high esteem always.

I trust that this letter will find you in perfect health.
