Respected Professor,

I have recently returned after a six months' sojourn at the Naini Central Prison. It was a strange irony of fate that though R.S.S. had nothing whatever to do with the heinous assassination of Mahatma Gandhi it was falsely implicated and thousands of us were made subjects for the application of Public Safety Laws and put behind Prison bars. Though I have been released my Habeas Corpus is still to be decided by the H.C. of Allahabad.

I have joined my duties again and was very keen to know about you. I met Shri K.S. Singhvi the other day and learnt about your wellfare. I do not know whether you are likely to pass this way in the near future; a little previous information will give us great pleasure as an opportunity of meeting you will be provided. I am doing well enough though we are still being harassed in spite of the complete vindication of our position at the trial proceedings at the Red Fort. Of course I am not worried for so long as one has a clear conscience one has no reason to fear any body. Though we were all kept in practically 'C' class as we refused classification we had an interesting time because of the large number. We hope we do not have to repeat our experience in near future.

There are great changes taking place in the Country, and we are all sure that with your world acknowledged gifts you are playing a very great part in building up the future research foundation of the Country at the National Laboratories. The work naturally enough is slow, but we are all keenly watching the achievements of our professor, who is now a great director, whom we have always admired, respected and tried to imitate in our little ways.

Everybody here is doing fine, and the University continues to move in its old lazy gait. Though I have scarcely a right to your precious time I trust you have not forgotten your old student, who however has done little to fulfil your expectations.

Ajit Ram must be meeting you often. We have not heard from Bhatia at all, but trust he is making good use of this opportunity.

Always remembering you, and expecting to hear from you ———

Yours ever respectfully
Rajendra Singh
